Description:

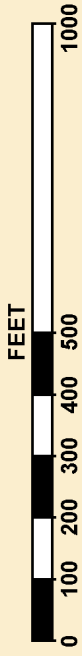

Main-à-Dieu is a mid-sized harbour and settlement, with space to anchor behind massive rock breakwaters. The former schoolhouse is now the Coastal Discovery Centre and is home to the Big Wave Café, Fishermen's Museum, and library, as well as serving a community centre. The harbour is very busy during lobster season but although fishing of one sort or another continues, after lobster season, there is usually room to dock on the L-shaped floating wharf. There are good walking trails here and in settled weather a trip can be made to the northern shore of Scatarie Island, which at one time was inhabited. It is an interesting place to visit, and well worth the effort.

Navigation:

Chart 4377 is essential for navigating "The Tiddle" as the Main-à-Dieu Passage is generally called by the locals. There several rocky hazards. Approach should be made from the Mad Dick Rock light & bell buoy, JJ6. From there, a pair of buoys mark the deepest water on the approach and another starboard-hand buoy is located off the eastern breakwater.
